The band exhibits the chops of a jazz fusion ensemble, augmenting tracks with small yet delightful details, from the classic hip-hop piano break that closes “Swamp Thing” to the stop-start beats of “Breathing Underwater” that sound like gulps of air.. The band creates a tapestry of diverse images while maintaining a strong sense of continuity: while tracks like Swamp Thing, Fingerprints, and By Fire sound like they ought not be by the same artist, let alone on the same record, they all share a similar harmonic pentatonic 'fingerprint', as it were; the same goes for Atari and Prince Minikid, which share a single-step chord change despite having significantly different musical surfaces.. If you still don't understand it, route your JAWS Cursor to the PC Cursor, and press the DOWN ARROW key until you hear JAWS say Serial No.. Simon Mavin on keyboards and Paul Bender on bass both demonstrate nothing short of virtuosity on their respective instruments: Bender lays the bass on thick on tracks such as Swamp Thing and provides intricate counterpoint on Molasses, while Mavin creates a varied ethereal soundscape with his synthesizer that defines and permeates the album..
